By THE KING'S ROYAL LETTER PATENT,
GRANTED TO LANCELOT PALMER, MAY 3, 1786.
For Making and Vending
United Tea and Coffee Urns:

BROWN, JAPANNED, PLATED, SILVER, or GOLD;
Contructed on an Eafy, Elegant, and much-admired principle.

The great inconvenience, and frequent accidents complained of, from having two feparate Urns for Tea and Coffice on the table at the faine time, are, by this invention, entirely prevented; commodious receptacles being difposed in the centre of the Tea Urn, for Coffice, Chocolate, &c. at pleafure, which are kept of an agreeable beat by the water in the centre of the Tea Urn, for Conee, Chocolate, &c. at pleafure, which are kept of an agreeable heat by the water furrounding it.

The Coffee, as well as the water for the Tea, being thus included in one compact and pleafing figure, are drawn off by patent Cocks, which are so constructed, as to remedy that general complaint of the water, &c. constantly dropping on the table.

These Urns, though united, may be used either for Tea without Cosse, or Cosse without Tea, as well as for both together; from which advantage it is evident, there will be no occasion for a Cosse-Pot or Urn; Many other advantages will present themselves at first view; for, independent of the utility and convenience of them, a very considerable faving will be derived to the purchasers.

To be had of Lancelot Palmer, at his Brown Tea and Cosse Urn Manusactury, No. 70. Little Britain, London; and of the principal silversmiths and Hardware-men in town and country.

To prevent imposition, the public are respectfully informed, that a Silver Plate, with the King's Arms, and the initials L. P. is fixed on the front of those Urns.—All others are counterfeits.

An extraordinary Acquittal, on a trial for murder. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth, two gentlemen of learning, converting together on a literary dispute. quarrelled, and happening to be in the fields, immediately engaged fword in hand, when one stabbed the other; and concluding, from the vast effusion of blood, that he had killed his antagonist, absconded

Soon after came by a peafant, and observing a man bleeding on the ground, setched some water in the corner of his hat, and taking the wounded body up-on his knee poured some down his throat, and also on his knee poured force down his throat, and also washed his wound, in example of the good Samaritan in the Gospel; but finding the object of his humanity was now quite dead, he laid down the corple and went on. But, perceiving his clothes very bloody, he thus communed with himself, "If I go through the village in this condition I shall certainly be suspected of having committed the murder, therefore I will go home the back way, and change my clothes." This he accordingly did.

The murder by this time becoming the common topic of general conversation, conjecture fixed suspicion on our Samaritan, from his wearing his best clothes on a working day; being esteemed a very pains taking honest man, this circumstance, and this character, induced a Justice of the Peace to grant a fearch warrant, on the execution of which, the bloody clothes of this industrious man were found in his lodgings; whereupon he was apprehended and taken before a magistrate, to whom he told the above flory; but was answered, that if a tale must be believed because it was plausible, that then every murderer, ingenious euough to invent a relation that could not be contradicted, would escape; - the prifoner therefore was fully committed for trial.

Upon his arraignment, which was before the Right Hon. Sir Edmund Anderson, Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas, the above circumstances were given in evidence, and the prisoner once more repeated the above plausible story in his defence.

The Judge observed, in fumming up the evidence to the Jury, that the circumstances, in his opinion, were too ffrong to be fatisfactorily accounted for, in the manner the prisoner had attempted to do. The Jury withdrew, and after much time spent in alter-was the only Juryman not fatisfied of the prisoner's guilt; for he, on the contrary, was fo prepoffesfed with an opinion of his innocence, that he did not think, he faid, any persuasion whatever could possibly induce him to agree with his brethren. The Court told him the verdict would not be taken unlefs they were all unanimous, and advised the foreman to retire again, and to reconfult with his companions, which he accordingly did, and by force of his argument and reason, that it seemed strange to to him, that the plausibility of the prisoner's story should affect the veracity of his defence; for that as his story was plausible so his defence might be true, and he innocent; however his guilt was as doubtful at least as his innocence, and therefore their verdict should, he contended, be in favour of the prisoner. In short, after the foreman had kept his companions out to long, that they were almost starved, they were at last prevailed on to change their opinion and join him in his; this they did with great reluctance, and brought in the prisoner not guilty.

As soon as the verdict of acquittal was recorded, the foreman addressed himself to the Court to this

"My Lord,
"Though I am about to reveal a circumstance that will prove fatal to me, yet I feel myself happy in the resolution, for I could not, wretch as I am, add perjury and a second murder to the first. Know then, my Lord, and my Fellows, that the prisoner at the bar is innocent, and I only guilty, for I myfelf committed the murder for which the other jury-men were all unanimous to condemn him, and I a-lone determined never to agree thereto. May I prefume, my Lord, to add fome observations on this day's deliverance, for it hath been a day of deliverance to us both ;- to the innocent prisoner from all fuspicions 4 - to the guilty foreman, from the tor-ments of a troubled confeience. My reason, my Lord for not disclosing the innocence of the prisoner to my brethren, on our confultation, was, because I thought it would be more fatisfactory to them to ground their verdict rather on their own conviction than on my evidence, and which, befide, might not perhaps have been strictly legal. The method I took to answer my purpose will also have this further desirable consequence, in that it will free my companions from a delicate fituation they might otherwife have perceived themselves in, on this occasion, viz. the necessity of appearing as witnesses against me on my trial, for the murder in question: whereas now the Coust may record my confession of guilt.

"To conclude, can we, my Lord, too much admire, either the extraordinary means, whereby the Almighty hath been pleased to discover and bring to light this murder; or the particular wisdom of the law of England, for one of its reasons for not permitting the Judges in Courts of Justice, to direct, advife, or observe on the evidence to the Jury, which is, because the Jury may happen, of their own knowledge, to be acquainted with circumstances, either of the innocence or guilt of the prisoner, unknown to Court; or can we, my Lord, too much admire the laws holding the unanimity of the Jury necessary to conviction, in all cases. And, further, does not Providence, my Lord, by this day's discovery, seem to point out, as a rule of unerring justice, never to convict for capital offences, on the mere evidence of circumstances only, fince the most probable may mif-lead and deceive, as is too apparent from my own most unhappy story: besides, consider my Lord, that reparation can never be made to the innocent, who fuffers by fuch dangerous means; whereas punishment may at a future period of time be inflicted on the guilty, by the appeals of relations, notwithstanding their acquittal in the first instance."

The Chief Justice pronounced her Majesty's gracious pardon, for this singular murderer.

S I R,

SOME very good advices to Stage-Writers having appeared in your last paper, I take the liberty to prefent to you a few

HINTS TO PLAYERS.

IN your appearances and behaviour upon the stage, remember to make yourfelf as remarkable as possible. In tragedy, in particular, let your arms be eternally swinging round like the fails of a wind mill, and your whole action like that of a feugle-man in a phrenfy. I have known this to be attended with the happiest effect, and to make ample amends for a total absence of all dignity, sentiment, and pathos. In making your exit from the stage, do not forget to let off the concluding lines with all the rant and differtion in your power. Thefe, you know, are called clap-trap; and, if a thundering noise ensues in the house, it is of no consequence to you whether it proceeds from the pit, or from the twelve-penny gallery; the spectators in the street, hearing the disturbance within, will conclude that you are a performer of uncommon merit; and the Manager in his next bill will not forget to mention the repeated burfls of applause from the very genteel audience who were witnesses of your last performance. Do not forget to eat and dribk between the acts. The thing is common fense, that great exertions demand proportionate supplies; or, to use an aphorism well known in the Brownonian school, " Profuse evacu-" ations require correspondent repletions."

The least part of your attention on the stage ought to be given to the business of the scene. Any carbon with their foreman respecting their verdict, blockhead may be attentive to what he is about; and they returned into Court, when the foreman being the more dull he may be, the less risk there is of his asked the usual questions, he informed the Judge he minding any thing else. But when you enter on the blockhead may be attentive to what he is about; and the more dull he may be, the less risk there is of his minding any thing eise. But when you enter on the stage, throw your eyes round the pit in search of some of your cronies, with whom; every three minutes, remember to exchange significant looks and shrugs. Nay, if you can contrive to nod to them occasionally, your fortune is made. This last-mentioned practice, which I reckon an improvement on the former, I have observed lately, with much satisfaction, to have spread from Shakespeare Square to the Pleasance, where Miss Girnier, a very elegant and accomplished young lady, took that public method of paying her respects to a gentleman in the pit, and who, as he had great reason seemed to be very well satisfied with so statering and conspicuous a mark of attention.

Getting drunk between the acts, or at least mauda Getting drunk between the acts, or at least manda-lin, is not only excuseable, but sometimes absolute-ly necessary. In low comedy, as in my Lord Duke, in High Life below Stairs, for example; or even up Stairs, in Sir John Brute, or Colonel Bully, in the Provok'd Wife, especially at the commencement of the third act, if you are not either drunk, or can appear drunk, you do not represent the character drawn by the poet. And as it must be acknowledged, that reality is, upon all occasions, preferable to appearances. I would recommend it to you, upon these occasions, to be bona fids, and in plain English advants.

glish -- drunk. Do not enter upon your part the moment you appear on the stage, as if you were in a hurry to have done with it, but wait with a becoming respect, in expectation of a clap first from the house. If that is seemingly rather long of coming, lift up your eyes is feemingly rather long of coming, lift up your eyes to the feeond gallery, no farther, or make a gentle, finking, easy bow. N. B. This to be particularly attended to. If nothing will move the house, you must e'en play off some devilish good joke of your own, in the course of your part, and which may either be about Lunardi, or Margaret Nicholson, or the Kraken of three miles long, whichever of these topics may happen to be most in vogue at the time they you may depend upon this producing a good rattle among the gods:

In advertising your benefit, night, let your hills be

In advertising your benefit-night, let your bills be flained with red or yellow, or some odd colour, and stained with red or yellow, or some odd colour, and consisting of at least three sheets of paper pasted together. This has a prodigious effect.

I was going to have said something of your religion, and in what manner you ought to pay court both to the high church party and to the sanatics, which last, by the way, are no great admirers of people of your profession. I must own, however, that as this subject is of somewhat delicate a discussion, it is entitled to a place by itself. At present, therefore, I shall only tell you a story, and from which your own good sense will easily pick out the moral.—In the reign of James II, the Court was busy in making converts to the Roman Catholic bufy in making converts to the Roman Catholic faith, in which they had fome fuccess. Some of faith, in which they had some success. Some of the new Papists pretended to have seen visions, and dreamed dreams; and, among the rest, a wicked fellow, Joe Haines, a player, of whom you may have heard, professed himself a convert, declaring, that the Virgin Mary had appeared to him. Lord Sunderland sent for Joe, and asked him about the truth of his conversion, and whether he had really seen the Virgin? "Yes, my Lord; I assure you it is a "fact."—" How was it, pray?"—"Why, as I "was lying in my bed, the Virgin appeared to me, and said, Arise, Joe t"—"You see, you rogue," said the Earl; "for if it had really been the Virgin "herself; she would have said Joseph, if it had been only out of respect to her husband."

FROM THE LONDON PAPERS, Sept. 30. Lifton, Aug. 8. Some time ago three French merchant ships which are in the negro trade upon the coasts of Juda arrived here; the Commander of these vessels, Mr Landolphe, has on board a negro Prince, named Mark Bandu Khan, fon to the King of Oree, whose kingdom is situated on the lower side of the Gold Coast. The above Prince, who is said to have passed some years in France, and speaks the language, is fo kept in fight by the French, that they would hardly permit him to come on shore yesterday to dine with an English merchant who had invited him : during the dinner, the French gentlemen who accompanied him took upon them to answer feveral questions which were put to the Prince, no doubt fear he should not answer to their liking. It is faid that Captain Landolphe, who is well known on the coast of Africa, is of opinion that the negro trade may be carried on to more advantage upon the coaft of Oree than upon that of Juda; and that it may fucceed the better, he has found means to gain the friendship of the king of that country, who has confided the care of his fon to him, and has granted an exclusive trade to the French for fix years.

It is of filver grey, and of fine symmetry. The politeness of all ranks of Nobility to their noble wistors has been very gravifying to them, and does great ho nour to the English nation. They have been shewn fome pieces of painting preparing for next Spring's exhibition, and were delighted with a piece reprefenting "Ulyffes shipwrecked, sitting affride a plank floating on the waves," as so beautifully described in floating on the waves," as foll the fifth book of the Odysley.

It has been afferted in some of the daily prints, that the internal disputes of the Dutch baye been amicably adjusted. But this is a gross imposition up. on the public; for whether they may terminate amicably or not, they are to a certainty at this moment very far from an adjustment! The States of Utrecht have indeed accepted the mediation of their Great and Noble Mightipesses the States of the Province of Holland: But though fuch a step may have the appearance of a tendency to peace, it is at bottom no more than an appearance; for the fentiments of the States of Holland are very well known to be completely hostile to those which are entertained by the States of Utrecha and friendly to the party that is supported by the inhabitants of the city of

From the different accounts from Holland it does not appear that it will be an eafy matter to bring about an accommodation. It is plain that the majority of the Seven Provinces is decidedly against the Stadtholder, and they cannot be supposed to give up the point, with the strength of the Republic at their command. - If the Stadtholder yields, there is an end to his power and rights; and if he perfilts, what is fo improbable as that the States will yield to him ?- If both parties are obstinate, it is plain that the interference of the King of Pruffit must be of a nature very different from mere mediation, and of this he is probably fufficiently aware ere this

The nature and principle of the dispute in Holland, is totally misconceived in England. Five of the States are against the Stadtholder, and two are for him, viz. Gueldres and Overyffel; but most of the inhabitants in Gueldres and Oversifel are a-gainst the Stadtholder. This makes the distinc-The States of Gueldres and Overyfiel fent a request to the Captain General, (who is Stadtholder) fend troops to garrifon the towns of Hattem and Elbourg. As Captain-General, he is obliged to obey those orders; and he did fo. The five other provinces, who are against the Stadtholder, have remonstrated with Gueldres and Overyssel on the Su Ject, and also with the Captain General, who has anfwered, that he was obliged to comply with the request made to him from the States of Gueldres and Overystel. The Prince has thus acted constitutionally in what he has done. It may indeed be attempted to be explained away by both parties, that is, by the States of Holland and the other; but the truth is, that the oftensible thing is the Hollanders, and the States of Gueldres, &c. nominally; therefore the Stadtholder is out of the dispute, unless it is determined, that he ought not to have complied with the request which had been made to him. But the true crime of the Stadtholder is, his supposed partiality for this country during the American war. The Dutch fay, he was not at that time faithful to them. And for this charge really, whatfoever may be pretended, they are faid to be at this time projecting a scheme to depose him as Stadtholder. The King of Prussa will not see this with indifference, nor can England.

It is now precisely a century fince the mafter of a vessel from China brought with him as an adventure three quarters of an hundred weight of green tea, being the first ever feen in this kingdom. He gave it to a ship-boy, named Burrows, to be disposed of. After carrying it up and down the city for a long time, he at last fold it to the then master of Lloyd's coffeehouse, in which the first cup of tes was drank in England. It would be matter of curious speculation to trace the annual confumption from that to the prefent period,

The last advices, which were brought over land from India, via Aleppo, and dated at Bombay in April laft, bring an account, that the Company's fervants there had not been able to procure their annual investments in Guzurat, (confisting of the coarfe goods, wanted for the African and West-India trade) or of pepper on the Malabar coast. And. that in confequence of these disappointments, two thips, the Duke of Montrofe, and another, had been fent to China for tea, which had until that time been kept upon the Malabar coaft, for the faid invest-

The following circumftance happened a few days fince on the coast of Suffex; and, as it exhibits a fpecies of unaccountable obstinacy on the one hand, as well as an inflance of the most perfevering humanity on the other, it will, doubtlefs, be acceptable to our readers. A veffel in the most imminent danger of immediate wreck, about a fortnight ago, gave fignals of the utmost distress just off Hattings. The people on the shore exerted every possible endeavour to relieve the crew; threw ropes into the reffel, and by that means drew all of them to land, except one boy, who abfolutely refused to quit the ship, though importunately and repeatedly defired. As the veffel was every moment in danger of being destroyed, there was no time for long entreaties, and the obitinate boy was left to his fate. One of the inhabitants of the town, however, determined to rescue a fellow-prisoner from this perilous condition, fwam to the veffel, and made many fruitless attempts to climb into it; but the fea being very high, and the veffel being toffed about with great violence, he was fre-quently thrown back, till he was almost exhausted with the fatigue, and the injuries he had experienced. But fo strong was the impulse of his humanity, that he continued his endeavours, and, at last, effected his purpofe. The boy had retreated to the cabbin, where he feemed to be fitting in the most tranquil composure, and remained so inflexible to the supplications of his generous benefactor, that the latter was obliged to try a method of a more forcible kind, and finding a rope's end, he used it so effectually, that the boy at last consented to be dragged on shore. The heroic preferver waited till the lad was fairly off, and then left the vessel himself; but his strength was fo fpent, and his body fo bruifed, that he reach ed land with great difficuty, and was fome time before he recovered. A gentleman who was upon the fpot, was fo ftruck with the unremitted philanthropy of the man, that he immediately proposed by a general contribution to reward him, and, by great personal activity in this amiable fervice, collected a liberal fubfcription.

A Bath correspondent says, the account given in our paper of the 21ft, relative to a certain Major a young lady of fourteen, is very erroncous. The gentleman is not a Major, nor is he a military The young lady is not a child of fourteen, man. but a full-grown woman; the gentleman was confined in prison, but is now out upon bigh bail, and will be tried for a burglary, though it is not suspected he got in with an intention to take any thing a-way. The gentleman has a wife who lives at Bath, with whom he had a very confiderable fortune.

As the following whimfical circumstance parries with it an uncommon degree of ingenuity, and no fmall portion of humour, it may not perhaps be un-acceptable to fome of our readers. An unfortunate tailor, who had committed fome law bufiness to the hand of an attorney, well practifed in his profession, had a bill delivered to him, containing fuch a variety of unexpected charges, that he thought himfelf fleeced most unmercifully. The only fatisfaction which occurred to him, was to prevail on the confcientious attorney to have a fult of clothes from him, for which he. in his turn, gave in fomething like the following bill: L. s. d. To measuring, and taking orders for a fuit of elothes,

By this bill he contrived to have a sufficient setoff against his attorney; and acted, no doubt, on principles of at least equal fairness and honesty. Extrast of a letter from Oftend, Sept. 24.

We are much concerned to acquaint you with the melancholy news of the total loss of the thip Mercury, Thomas Davidson matter, that sailed from your port the 21st inft. bound for Gibraltar, with a num-ber of passengers on board.

"The 24th, at 3 o'clock A. M. they faw and recognised the steeple of Ostend, and accordingly shaped their course towards the Chops of the Channel, but unfortunately firuck upon a bank about 7 o'clock that evening, the wind blowing very hard at north, and the fea running mountains height, fo that the fhip foon went to pieces, and, as far as we can learn, every foul on board perified, three only can learn, every foul on board perished, three only excepted, who were saved on a piece of the wreck, and taken up by a pilot-boat when just ready to drop from fatigue and cold. Two of these people are, John Paterson carpenter, and Walter Mourgomery a passenger. The name of the third we cannot learn, as he is at Mardyck, about three or four miles from this, and said to be very ill, as indeed are the two we have named. We do not imagine so much of the wreck will be saved as pay the expences.—One of the chest or boxes come ashore has the name of Jean Stewart upon it."

Extract of a letter from Dunkirk to a gentleman in Leith, dated Sept. 26. 1786.

"We are extremely forry to inform you, that your ship Mercury, Thomas Davidson master, was wrecked on a sand bank, about six miles off this coast, last Sunday, about seven o'clock in the even-coaft, last Sunday, about feven o'clock in the evening. At nine she went to pieces, and we appre-hend all the people on board, except John Paterson carpenter, and Walter Montgomery a passenger, were drowned. These two men stoated all night on part of the wreck, and yesterday morning, about ten o'clock, were taken up by our pilot-boat, and brought on shore here, having, their legs and other parts of their bodies much bruifed. The moment we were informed of the difinal accident, we flew to the affiliance of these unfortunate men, got them conveyed to a convenient lodging, where we ordered them a supply of every thing they stood in need of in their distressed situation, and a doctor to attend them, who assures us they are in a fair way of recovery. We are just now told, that two others were taken up, and carried to a village called Mardyck, about three miles to the westward of this port; that one of them is since dead, and the other is not likely to recover. We have not yet been able to learn their names. Some pieces of the wreck, and other trifling articles, have been caft on shore, and some taken up by boats which went out on purpose. These articles are deposited in the Admiralty warehouses.'

'Ar a small public house, on Beckampton Downs, about eight miles from Malbro', on the way to Devizes, hangs a board, on which is the following inferiprion: "To be seen within, the Fork that belonged to the identical Knife wherewith Margaret Nicholson attempted to stab his Majesty King George the IIId. Admittance one penny." And, upon being desired to produce this treasure, he brings out a little deal box, in which is carefully concealed a large old green hafted carving fork; and on the lid of the box, at once to colour the ludicrous imposition, and increase the curiosity, is written, "This Fork, and the Knife belonging to it, were the desert Knife and Fork of Mr Burn the samous Irish Giant; to whom Mrs Nicholson was contin, three times reto whom Mrs Nicholfon was couffin, three times reto whom Mrs Nicholion was coulin, three times re-moved." The landlord is a poor infirm old man, and, though not destitute of drollery, has simplicity enough to credit the whole account, which, together with the Fork, was given to him, as he lays, by a neighbouring gentleman, that he might get a penny to assist him. An evidence at once of the humour and humanity of the giver. This account is given by one who travelled the Bath road a few days ago,

Extract o a letter from Dublin, Sept. 24.

4 Preparations are making at Mr Orde's seat in the park; for his reception. By letters that arrived in the last packet, we are informed, that Mr Orde's health it very nearly restored, and that he will positively return in the course of a month.

4 The purpose of Mr Orde's sadden return is, to meet Parliament in December next. The disturbances in the fouth of Ireland are not the reason of this early meeting; there are many parts of the

" So much of the commercial treaty with France has transpired, as that Irish linens will be admitted has transpired, as that Irish linens will be admitted into her ports, and, upon the idea of reciprocity, French cambrics will be admitted into ours. It is about to imagine, that the importation of French cambrics can at all interfete with the Irish linen trade; for it is well known, that the greater part of the cambrics entered here under the denomination of the cambries entered here under the denomination of Scots, was really French, that had been imaggled into Scotland, and re-exported here.

"It has also transpired, that all our mixed manufactures are totally prohibited—by mixed manufactures, we mean tabbies and poplins. A liberty of exporting them to France, it was thought by our good friends, would interfere with the fluffs and crause of Navarith Exposure. FOR THE CALEDONIAN MERCURY. To the Right Hon. JOHN GRIEVE; Lord Proveft of Edinburgh

My Lord, A S you are again entering thom the office of Chief Magistrate, I beg leave to address you upon one of the latest steps of your predecessors conduct, the proreguing of the High School; in expedation, that when the feafon of the years occurs, your Lordship will adopt an opposite line.

I mean not at present to enquire, what right your Lordship and the other Magistrates of Edinburgh have to exercise the jurisdiction of dictating to the Masters of the High School, at what period the vacation should commence, or how long it should continue. I shall not dispute your being proper judges of a matter of this fort.—All I am now to maintain is, that in fo doing, your Lordthip's predeceffors acted wrong, and that the tendency of this conduct is to the lofs of education, and the habits of idleness in upwards of 500 boys who attend that re-fpectable feminary of learning.

Education, my Lord, is encreased in its expence, much beyond the due proportion fiftee the days of my youth.—Twelve faillings a quarter for Latin, and as much for Writing, joined to the other requi-fite branches, become an object to a Gentleman of narrow fortune, who has perhaps three or four fons

But if the outlay of money is to be confidered, how much more are we to estimate the loss of time? nay, what is much worse than the simple annihilation of time, the errors, the follies, and the misfortunes, which I ever found my children most liable to fall into on the accurred play-days.

I shall illustrate my argument, by stating the proportion of the year which the masters and boys of the High School have for play, reckoning from the inh of August has; and submit it to your Landship and the Public to draw the conclusion. The year consists of twelve months, or a see days. Of this space, no school meets on the following days.

Imprinit, During the vacations real and nontinal, from 7th of August to 19th of September. Secundo, From 19th of September, the school meets only from nine to eleven in the day, till the sist of October is a Sunday, the ad is quarter-day, consequently a play-day; therefore business does not seriously begin till the 3d of October. Thus the school has in sact one sump article of vacation of two months bating sour days. Terio, Every Sunday during the year. Quarto, Every Saturday afternoon during the stummer season. Sexto, The four quarter days. Septimo, Four days during the set of Clavo, Four days during the autumn sacrament. Octavo, Four days unor at the new year. Decimo, Christmas day, Candlemas day, the days the deaths Seated Affective season. autum lacranent. None, Your days more at the new year. Decimo, Christmas day, Candlemas day, the day the General Assembly sits down, the King's birthday, the day the King's plate is run for, &c. Hoping that your Lordship will retiened this abominable waste of time, I remain, with great respects Edinburgh, Ostober 3, 1786. HORATIO.

FORTH AND CLYDE NAVIGATION.

THE Proprietors of the Canal, having resolved still more to improve the system of their Track-Boats, have not only constructed two New Vessels, with every accommodation for passengers; but have also connected their departure and arrival with Stage-coaches at Glasgow and Falkirk, in such a manner as to remore every inconvenience to which travellers between Edinburgh and Glasgow were formerly subjected.

For this purpose, Stage-coaches are established between Glasgow and the Canal-Bason, and also between the landing-place at Lock, No. 16, and the town of Falkirk.—These Robert Provan, vintner at the Crofs, and John Jervas, innkeeper at the Canal-Bason, have undertaken this business at Glasgow, for the accommodation of passengers going to or coming from the Bason, at the departure and arrival of the boats.

Ralph Potts, vintner in Falkirk, will, in like manner, convey paffengers to of from Falkirk, will, in like manner, convey paffengers to of from Falkirk, and his coach will be in waiting at No. 16, on the evening of the arrival of the Track-boat, and will convey such as apply to him in the morning of the departure, to Lock No. 16.

Infide Paffengers 2 d.
Outfide Paffengers I d.
Ralph Potts will convey paffengers travelling between Falkirk and Edinburgh, in his Stage-coach, which goes and returns on the fame day, leaving Falkirk every Monday, Wednefday, and Friday at fix o'clock in the morning; and reaching Edinburgh before breakfast—and fetting off at four o'clock the same evening from the house of Robert Marfhall in the Grassmarket, and reaching Falkirk at nine o'clock at night

That the departure and arrival of the two Track-boats may correspond with the arrangement of the Stage-coach from Falkirk to Edinburgh, the two new boats, LADY Augustant, James Smith Matter, and LADY CATHERINE, Alexander Doualdon Matter, continue to depart from each end of the Canal every Tuefdoy, Thurfdoy, and Saturday, while the navigation is open. The one vessel departing from the Bafon near Glasgow, a quarter past seven o'clock; during the months of March, April, May, June, July, August, and September; and at a quarter past eight during the months of October, November, December, January, and February. And the other vessel departing from Lock, No. 16, near Falkirk, at nine o'clock, from March to September, and ten o'clock for the remainder of the year.—The Stages from Glasgow and Falkirk will set out about a quarter of an hour before the departure of the boats, corresponding to the months above specified.

Each passenger to be allowed 40 lb. of luggage.

The Lady Augusta and Lady Catherine are both fitted in the neatest manner for genteel passengers. The cabins and steerages are kept_clean, and shoves are sitted in each for the purpose of keeping good fires in cold or rainy weather. The trip, cost and west, will be performed in about eight hours. Passengers (if they chuse it) may be accommodated with breaktasts and dianers, on board the Track-boats, during their periodical trips, either east or west, at a very moderate expence, on ordering the same from Mr Potts at Falkirk, or Mr Jervas at the Bason at Glasgow.

The whole expence of travelling between Glasgow and Edinburgh, including the Canal and Stage-coaches, will not exceed the following very moderate rates:

For cabin and inside passengers, 6 s. 9 d. in all. For theerage and outside passengers, 4 s. 1 d. in all. It is hoped so moderate a charge, added to the variety, ease, and convenience, which this mode of travelling affords, will induce the public to favour the undertaking.

Goods passing along the Canal will be received, as formerly, at the General Warehouses of Mess. Gibbert Hamilton in Glasgow, John Winnington at Grangemouth, and John Courage in London; and, so far as depends on the Canal Navigation, the same facility will be given as if fent by a stage-waggon, and on terms much more moderate. The proprietors of in London; and, to far as depends on the Canai Navigation, the fame facility will be given as if fent by a flage-waggon, and on terms much more moderate. The proprietors of goods will have no trouble; and proper receipts will be given by the different agents, on whofe fidelity, accuracy, and attention, the public may have the utmost dependence.
